

WJEA is a non-profit organization for journalism educators, offering professional development and resources to journalism teachers and media advisers in Washington state schools. WJEA promotes professionalism by encouraging and rewarding student excellence and teacher achievement. WJEA supports a free and responsible scholastic press.

NEWSPAPER • YEARBOOK • ONLINE • BROADCAST
 Launch the new school year by giving your school media program a jump start. Join high school media students and their advisers from around the region for a day on the Whitworth University campus. Media professionals representing print, broadcast, and online will present on a range of topics during morning sessions. The day opens with keynote Karama Horne, freelance culture journalist, podcaster, "recovering video editor" and current contributing editor to Syfy Wire.

KEYNOTE SPEAKER

Karama Horne is a freelance culture journalist, podcaster and recovering video editor parked at the intersection of geekdom and diversity.

The New York-based content creator is a contributing editor to SYFY Wire where she writes a weekly feature about indie comics.

As the creator of the popular website theblerdgurl.com, Horne regularly leads discussions on inclusion and representation within the pop culture genre across social media as well as on camera.

Featured on red carpets and panels across the country, Horne can be found on convention stages across the country from San Diego Comic Con, to New York Comic Con and is quoted in Vulture, The San Francisco Chronicle and Black Enterprise. Horne can be seen in Marvel Comic's Make Me a Hero video Series and this year penned her first published work, a chapter in the Dark Horse Comics Anthology Pros and (Comic) Cons.
